- Frontline health workers, cleaners, home-care, volunteers.
- Immediate effects on informal jobs;
- Overload and unpaid work at home – housekeeping, education, etc.
- Rising numbers of domestic violence

Michele Bachelet

Women at risk

She spoke about with great concern about women in Latin America, citing some countries as Guatemala, where 80% of the work of women is done informally so there is increased difficulty to help them financially during the pandemic. In this scenario, coronavirus poses a great risk as women across have already been subject to strong gender discrimination and inequality.

Since isolation measures to contain the spread of the new virus began to be applied in the region, there has been a general increase in the number of gender violence cases across Brazil, Argentina and Peru, her office reported.

In addition, Bachelet pointed out the situation of greater risk for domestic workers, indigenous people, disabled individuals, immigrants, those infected with HIV and the LGBT group.
